

The keep of the castle was the highest point and the center of defense. In the absence of a central authority, defenses were local, and the responsibility of the lord. At times of danger, a signal was sounded to warn people in the area so they could seek protection within the castle.