

The interior of a serf's house was equally simple. Of one or two rooms, its interior was shared by livestock. The smoke from the open hearth was vented through a hole cut in the roof. Household goods were few and simple, utensils being of wood and pottery, with some metal. The diet was limited and monotonous.